

Contributors

Citation: Contributors (2025) Serie Speciale. “Quaderni di Lea – Scrittori e Scritture d'Oriente e d'Occidente” 7: pp. 143-144. doi: <https://doi.org/10.36253/lea-1824-484x-16034>.

Serena Baiesi (<serena.baiesi@unibo.it>) is Associate Professor of English Literature at the University of Bologna where she teaches British Romanticism. Her research projects and publications are related to Romantic poetry, Leigh Hunt and political writings, Mary Shelley, Gothic literature, Jane Austen, Romantic theatre, and slavery literature. She is the representative of CISR (Inter-university Centre for the Study of Romanticism) at the University of Bologna, and the coordinator of the PhD program in Modern Languages, Literatures and Cultures: Diversity and Inclusion.

Annalisa Federici (<annalisa.federici@uniroma3.it>) is Associate Professor of English Language, Translation and Linguistics at Roma Tre University. She holds a PhD in Comparative Literature from the University of Perugia. She has published extensively on formal and stylistic aspects in modernist fiction, and the relationship between language and psychological processes. More recently, her research interests have focused on (Critical) Stylistics, Critical Discourse Analysis, as well as periodical, reception, and translation studies. She is currently working on gender ideologies and representations of femininity in different kinds of texts, ranging from nineteenth-century medical journals and early twentieth-century women's magazines to contemporary healthcare communication and illness narratives, investigated from critical discourse analytic and critical/applied stylistic perspectives.

Carlotta Fiammenghi (<carlotta.fiammenghi@univr.it>) earned a PhD in English Linguistics from the University of Milan with a dissertation on the newspaper coverage of the MMR vaccine. She is researcher in tenure track at the University of Verona. Her research interests include corpus-assisted discourse analysis, medical English, and medical discourse.

Clark Lawlor (<clark.lawlor@northumbria.ac.uk>) is Full Professor of English Literature at Northumbria University. He has written on cultural histories of disease, especially, consumption/tuberculosis, and melancholia and depression, from Classical times to the present day. He has been Principal Investigator for two Major Leverhulme projects: “Fashionable Diseases: Medicine, Literature and Culture, ca. 1660-1832” (2013-2016), and “Writing Doctors: Representation and Medical Personality ca. 1660-1832” (2018-2021). His key publications include Consumption and Literature: The Making of the Romantic Disease

(2006), From Melancholia to Prozac: A History of Depression (2012), and “The Paradox of Fashionable Breath” (2021, in The Life of Breath in Literature, Culture and Medicine). He co-edited a special issue of the Journal of Literature and Medicine (Fashionable Diseases, 2017) and two collections on Literature and Medicine for Cambridge University Press (2021).

Isabella Martini (<isabella.martini@unifi.it>) teaches at the University of Florence. She holds a PhD. in Foreign Literature (English specialisation), earned at the University of Pisa. She has published on the Anglo-Canadian short story and on translation. Recently she has focused on research in linguistics, specifically on corpus linguistics, media discourse, and historical English, publishing on the linguistic representation of the Armenian genocide in letters to the editor. She is also a member of The Corpora and Historical English Research Group (CHER) – Florence Unit and of the Italian Association of English Studies (Associazione Italiana di Anglistica – AIA).

Iliaria Natali (<iliana.natali@unifi.it>) is Associate Professor of English Literature at the University of Florence. Her primary research interests lie in the study of modern manuscripts and the processes of literary composition, with a special emphasis on twentieth-century texts. Since 2016, she has explored the intersections between literature and the history of medicine, particularly investigating how mental health issues are represented in literary works from the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. She has published widely on these subjects, contributing articles, essays, and book chapters to numerous scholarly publications. She also serves as the General Editor of the peer reviewed journal LEA and is an honorary international member of the Medicine, Health and Wellbeing in the Humanities Research Group at Northumbria University, UK.

Valentina Pramaggiore (<valentina.pramaggiore@unibo.it>) is a Research Fellow in the Department of Modern Languages, Literatures and Cultures at the University of Bologna, where she conducts research in the fields of English literature, gender and disability studies. Her main focus is on Romantic and Early Modern women writers.

Andrea Raso (<andrea.raso@uniroma3.it>) is a PhD candidate in English Literature at Roma Tre University (Rome). After graduating from Sapienza University with an MA thesis on Virginia Woolf and difference feminism, he is now working on a project on Jeanette Winterson and the Posthuman. He published peer-reviewed articles on feminist and queer science fiction and the literary manifestations of trans- and posthumanist philosophy.

Stefano Rossi (<stefano.rossi.1@unipd.it>) earned a PhD in English literature from the University of Padua with a thesis on time phenomenology in S. Beckett and W.R. Bion. His research interests include MH and trauma and disability studies. He has written on psychosis and degeneracy in 19th and 20th-century English literature.

Girolamo Tessuto (<girolamo.tessuto@unicampania.it>) is Full Professor of English Language, Translation and Linguistics at the Department of Precision Medicine of the University of Campania Luigi Vanvitelli, where he is also Director of the Centre for Interdisciplinary Research in Language and Medicine (CIRLaM), formerly Centre for Research in Language and Law (CRILL). He also teaches in the Law Department of this University. Besides memberships of several academic and professional associations, he is an editorial board member of various international English Linguistics journals, and chief editor of the Medical Discourse and Communication internationally peer-reviewed series. His research interests focus primarily on (critical) discourse analysis of academic, professional, and institutional genres in medical, healthcare, and legal contexts, English for Specific/Academic Purposes, and specialised translation. His published academic work comprises research monographs and several publications appearing as research articles, book chapters, co-edited volumes, as well as book reviews and endorsements.